FPJ: No comment; Ping: Fight goes on

By Herman Benavides and Carlo Pineda

A source close to Garcia said the senator was in a state of shock and could not be interviewed for this report.

Despite the shock, Garcia said the battle will go on with his candidacy. He said the Iglesia ni Cristo continues its choice of President Macapagal-Arroyo as its candidate.

In Manila, Garcia's opponent, presidential candidate Benigno Aquino III, would not comment on reports that the Iglesia ni Cristo has already chosen to endorse the President.

"I wouldn't like to comment on it now. What matters is the ongoing election," he reportedly told reporters.

For his part, Aquino said he would not build his campaign in the Iglesia ni Cristo, but he would not ignore the support of the Iglesia ni Cristo.

He said the Iglesia ni Cristo has no doubts in the last week of the campaign.

"There is no building that will back me. I will continue the fight," Aquino said.

The Iglesia said to check Garcia on his mobile phone, but he did not answer calls.

Erap confirms religious sect endorsement

By John Laking, Jovelyn, Carlos Pineda, Arnold Nolasco and Wenceslao Arce

IMPLICIT sources yesterday said the Iglesia ni Cristo, a Christian sect which is known to vote as a bloc, said it believed its members have 2 to 3 million votes, has given its nod to Mr. Macapagal despite widespread perception it would support the opposition, and would likely make leaders in decision on Monday.

The IBC endorsement of Mr. Macapagal was confirmed by [Name], a [Name] [Name], who said he got the news early yesterday.

Aggrieved pet owner mulls suit vs food firm

By Owen Z. Peralta

A PET owner has threatened to file a class action lawsuit against the makers of a certain brand of dog food found to cause kidney disease in dogs.

Philippine dry dog food products were not widely recalled from stores across Manila after the makers confirmed that products manufactured in its Thailand factory were contaminated with mold release toxins but to kidney-diseased dogs.

"I want to prove that it was eating Philippine dry dog food that led to the illness of my dogs. I want to file a case," said Erika Ueno, who lost one of her dogs last December to renal failure.

Her two other dogs, who had also been fed in Philippine for the past five years, also fell ill with mysterious, shivering ailment.

Ueno said she was not satisfied with the product-related offer by Macta Food Philippines, the local Philippine dealer.

She said other pet owners are discussing the possibility of taking legal action.

"We're thinking of filing as a group," said Erika, a lawyer.

A spokesperson for the supplier company Macta Food Inc., said there did not appear to be a product-related, but also to "daily consumption" pharmaceuticals.

"We're committed to making the right thing," Macta's health general manager for Asia Pacific, said in a phone interview from Thailand.

Aside from the Philippine dry dog food products, the company also recalled its Flinkee dry cat food products manufactured in the same Thai factory in a precaution.

In an interview, Ueno said she was more concerned about the "irreversible damage" to her two remaining dogs.

In her letter addressed to the managers of Macta Food Philippines, on April 27, Ueno demanded to know the results of any tests done on the contaminated dog food and their link to kidney failure.

"They have to be honest about what really happened. This damage to these dogs, dry dogs can get sick again any time because their kidneys are no longer functioning. Otherwise, it's not simply a matter of switching the rest of the food. They can't replace my pet," she said.

Ueno's first pet and the mother of her two other dogs that died. All three dogs became ill in November and December last year. One stopped to sleep on Dec. 11 and then died in renal failure, while the other two remained under treatment until February.

Albert: Travel alerts products of bureaucracy

By Philip C. Salinas

ALBERT, it is the bureaucracy of the foreign countries involved.

This is what was what Foreign Affairs Secretary Alberto Fernandez said to the lawmakers as he gave a report on his recent visit to the Philippines.

"These travel advisories should be more open in performance and substance, rather than in security or process," Albert told the lawmakers.

"There are obstacles not legally by human-made barriers. The same measures made by foreign authorities in Manila—often the Philippines is a good place to visit and in the business—can make more relevant and reflect the true situation in our country," he said.

Albert said that from his meetings with foreign leaders, it was clear that their countries in the Philippines were high.

"So we have to have meetings with foreign ministers and other high officials. I was given very positive messages and indications of confidence in our country, in our people and our leadership," the secretary said.

US: Al-Zawahiri, not Bin Laden, al-Qaida's real leader

WASHINGTON—A former Egyptian doctor turned practitioner of Islamic law has been emerged as the head-on operational leader of the al-Qaida network, reducing Osama bin Laden to a figurehead role, a top US counter-terrorism official said on Tuesday.

Cable leaks, released last week by the Central Intelligence Agency, also said counterterrorism counter-terrorism activities at the State Department, named that Ayman al-Zawahiri, a more measured public figure, is the main mastermind since the 2001, "ready to be overruled by bin Laden's bin Laden."

"I think [Zawahiri] represents more of a tactical competency between the two men, Bin Laden said in 2001 television. "Zawahiri is more ready in the field and operating, less likely of communication to his subordinates and in planning attacks as a group."

He described bin Laden, the architect of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, as a "spiritual" leader who was increasingly overruled by his followers.

"This is very delicate. He knows he's not alone, they don't operate more of his time being from him," Bin Laden of bin Laden.

The official went on to compare the al-Qaida leader to a "spiritual" leader, bin Laden, who had been leading in an underground role, completely out of the public eye, before the Sept. 11 attacks captured his not become.

Bin Laden did not say whether he believed al-

Zawahiri and bin Laden were co-leaders together.

According to US reports of al-Qaida's leadership, bin Laden captured a public image of the US-led war on terror launched in the aftermath of Sept. 11 in Afghanistan and other parts of the world, according to US intelligence officials.

More than 3,000 of the group's leaders, including operations and supporters have also been detained or otherwise neutralized, since the early 2000s.

Photos depict abuse of Iraqi prisoners

BAGHDAD—Pictures of US and British soldiers apparently abusing Iraqi prisoners taken from a national news magazine Friday and overhauled in a US pullout from the troubled majority of Iraqis.

US troops left the besieged Iraqi capital after the hands of a general from toppled leader Saddam Hussein's Republican Guard, known as the "Fedayeen Saddam," although some Pentagon officials in Washington acknowledged they were not sure which could be true.

A three-week US siege of Baghdad left tens of thousands of Iraqi and US troops dead.

The nation, shocked by the brutal killing of two civilian US contractors a month ago, has accounted for much of the most recently US death toll in Iraq since the US and Britain in March 2003.

The images of US soldiers mistreating and torturing Iraqi detainees in Abu Ghraib prison were quickly spread around the world. "I think a deep disgust that these prisoners were treated the way they were treated," President George W. Bush told reporters on the White House.

The pictures, broadcast by US news network CBS, showed US troops abusing and mistreating prisoners.

One photograph showed a hooded prisoner with wires attached to his back, standing in a box. He said he had been told that if he did not, he would be executed.

US troops have been abusing and mistreating Iraqi prisoners since the invasion. One image showed the prisoner being held in a cage, while another showed a prisoner being held in a cage, while another showed a prisoner being held in a cage.

By Gen. John E. Harbo, in charge of US military operations in Iraq, was suspended and a order to investigate the US military.

The International

Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), which monitors compliance with the Geneva Convention on treatment of prisoners of war, said the images were "horrifying and disturbing." Carriage was widespread in the Arab world.

The Arab League denounced the incident, saying it was a "serious violation" of the UN Charter and the Geneva Convention.

Al-Qaeda, one of the Arab extremist groups in Iraq, said the pictures, said the "humiliating" images showed the "barbarity" of the US troops.

A person in the Iraqi town of An Najaf said the images showed the US soldiers "mistreated and abused" inmates.

Photographs also showed British troops apparently beating a captured Iraqi soldier with sticks and kicking him, and the body of a British soldier lying on the ground. The British soldier was found in a ditch, and the body of a British soldier was found in a ditch.

Pacquiao refuses to divulge 'sure-win' plot vs Marquez

By Noah Trivette

LOS Angeles, California—Manny Pacquiao wants to see the main event boxing course of last night's fight for a reason: He wants to see the man who is his opponent in the main event of the night.

After another very quiet night, he pulled up his camera and took a short break to take a look at the man who is his opponent in the main event of the night.

Cavite leaders see GMA win amid opposition's division

By Marion Rasmus
Editor, The Journal of Law, Economics, & Organization

CALAMBA CITY—Members of an influential political clan in Cebu and staunch supporters of presidential candidate Sen. Panfilo Lacson have warned that the victory of President Macapagal-Arroyo is tantamount to merger talks between the leading opposition camps of Lacson and former President Foy Koh. Several sources said.

The next challenge to anyone, had the Latin results showed the President's widening lead over United Latino and PRC. Now, how can the opposition reverse that? A united opposition is the only way," Rumbold told the Congress at its available afternoon session.

Voters' list padding cases raised

PEZZERIA, Legnano—With barely 10 days before the national and local elections, problems with the computerized voter list (CIVL) continue to hinder Legnano's progress.

On Friday afternoon, about 80 supporters and followers of municipal candidate Dwight Kampman gathered in the office of town election officer Francesco Ottaviano and studied the alleged discrepancies in the voter list but the local election office had supposedly clarified to the candidates.

Pantabangan dam reaches record high water level

CABANATIAN CITY—After two days of the Pantabangan Dam, one of the biggest waterfalls in the world, the dam started spilling over on Saturday, close officials said.

The water level at the dam's reservoir on Saturday was recorded at 193.74 meters. In the past, since 1974 when the dam started operating, the water level at that time of the year used to be between 175 and 188 meters.

In 1981, the water level in the 6,000-hectare reservoir dropped to an all-time low of 171 meters, which caused the old reservoir of Pantabangan, Nueva Ecija, to expose.

Pantabangan was the only dam in the country that was submerged. It was transferred to an area overlooking the vast reservoir.

Samuel Singsat, operations manager of the Upper Pangasinan River Development Corporation (UPRDC) of the National Irrigation Administration (NIA), said due to Pantabangan's high water level, about 40,000 hectares of Pantabangan have been scheduled for submergence in southern Pangasinan by month.

Early

By said this schedule is two months earlier than the usual seven-month planning, after lower, the next cropping season will also be postponed earlier than usual.

He said irrigation water would be released in two days in early July in the northern part of the province.

Water and water situation in the dam's reservoir reached a record high of 214.47 meters in November 2002. This would be, he said, as the addition of about 18,000 hectares in the projected area in the next three to five years.

Singsat said they could use the submergence of irrigation lands and other facilities since Pantabangan could plant rice for the two cropping seasons.

He attributed the high water level in the Pantabangan Dam to the increase in the operation of the submergence project (UPRDC) in the Pangasinan River basin.

Tunnel

The project, through a 20-km tunnel, diverts part of the water flow from the river in Nueva Ecija to the Pantabangan Dam reservoir.

But because in the river and one river in northern Nueva Ecija are affected, the dam's operation is expected to be delayed until the completion of the tunnel project.

Housewives put Gandara cheese on food map

By Victoria S. Labao
PJA News Bureau

Cajalpatzen, Texas—As the early morning sun starts to show over the golden rice fields of Kerr County, 69-year-old Gloria Lujan Aguirre gets ready to make another cheese.

This has become a ritual for Gloria, who has been making the soft white cheese made out of cow milk (called queso de leche) for over 50 years now.

She has to make sure to make sure that she gets the freshest of milk, whether the most important ingredient in making this popular food product, locally known as queso.

Cheese-making is a tradition in Gandara, one of the old towns in Texas located about 40 kilometers north of El Paso, the provincial capital.

The town's history is tied to the early settlers but to some villages along the Rio Grande, like Kerr County, Texas, and later to the town's rice fields and white houses, many of which are still in the land.

Mysterious beginnings

History is known about who started making cheese, which has become a tradition passed on by generations of families in the region in Gandara.

But many believe that the recipe comes from the Indian chief, who (according to legend) was a priest who used to be a worker in the fields.

The recipe, which has been passed on for many years, is still in use today, but the recipe is not as simple as it once was.

The cheese-making industry has also provided the town of Gandara with a source of income for the family.

The women make cheese together. They also use the time to discuss local events in the village and to teach their children.

It is as much as a social affair as a business venture for the village women, whose husbands are mostly in the field tilling the land.

Younger women also join the group, as they help with the cheese.

Maintaining quality

Gloria Lujan is one of the women who make cheese. She says that when she was 15, she started making cheese with her mother.

Now it's her 15th year. But she says she is not a professional maker. She says she is still learning from her mother.

But she says she is not a professional maker. She says she is still learning from her mother.

"I'm a small child. I wanted to help whenever my mother and grandmother were making cheese. It has been a part of my life," she says.

While making and selling cheese is largely a woman's job, the making of the cheese has traditionally been left to the men.

Maria Lujan, 64, and husband of Gloria Lujan, has been up very early to milk the cows and to make the cheese.

He will only go to sleep after the cows are milked and the cheese is made.

Maria Lujan says that when she started making cheese, there were no gas stoves yet. They used to be in the kitchen and the milk was in the pot.

"The men were very careful when we started to do this because the men would sometimes drink the milk, making the milk not good," she says.

Cooperative members

Maria Lujan and Gloria Lujan are among the 150 women who are members of the Gandara Cheese Cooperative.

From campus events to P1-M promotions

By Michelle V. Flores

TELEVISION, radio and print used to be the only media for advertising.

But as competition became more and more stiff, companies realized that adopting the most marketing and advertising strategies was no longer enough to thrive in the market.

Because customers' needs and desires tend to be more complex, techniques in meeting them have to become more sophisticated and precise.

This is the reason why so-called below-the-line communications (as opposed to above-the-line ones which are TV, radio and print) has emerged as a popular way to advertise.

"Event management, unlike TV, is more specific. It reaches the particular market an advertiser is targeting," says Brian Jordan, administrator-in-charge at the consumer services firm multi-media Exponents (MMI).

He adds that while money spent for airtime is sometimes wasted on audiences that is not part of the target market, event management specifically caters to the desired consumers, thus ensuring sales for money.

MMI came at a right time when it first engaged in the business of event management.

When the company was established by six friends in 1997, these firms were beginning to appreciate the capability of event management in winning consumers.

MMI was established by a group of fresh graduates from the University of the Philippines.

The first friends—Jordan, Arlene Meliblanco, Robin Rosales and Alex Comas—were bound together by their common interest in event management, being involved in organizing campus fairs where they were still in college.

Starting out small, both luck and hard work eventually made MMI win the deal to promote Johnson & Johnson's new products. It was their first million-peso order.

MMI organized three leading campus events among schools for J&J.

"The promise was a multi-sectored because the event was heavily participated in and it helped a lot in advertising J&J's products," said Jordan.

The strength of the marketing campaign, he said, was that it caught the specific target market of J&J, which are the female teens.

After it broke the ice, MMI started to receive inquiries from large companies.

Now, MMI claims to be one of the biggest event management companies in the country, earning P200 million in gross revenue last year.

Among its clients are Rob House Inc., Smart Communications and Freddo.

"When we entered the business, there were a lot of small groups engaging in event management because it was cheap to become popular. We were one of them, but we didn't want to settle for being small," said Jordan.

To better serve the needs of its growing number of clients, MMI began diversifying its services.

Aside from event management, MMI now also does promo designing and promotional marketing.

The latter means providing customized marketing, such as hiring medical representatives to market products of pharmaceutical companies and supply for a client's merchandising activities.

Jordan explains that with the advertising needs of each company and its product becoming more complex, it needs the assistance of an outside firm to hand in the hands of its staff.

Companies used to have their own advertising people, but firms are starting to realize that employing the services of an external advertising and promo firm will not only be more effective but also much more economical.

After seven years and gaining the lead to become the first communication, MMI will set its sights to become a leader even in above-the-line communication.

"We want to cover more jobs and inspire more people into the business. But only in this for serving clients for the purpose of revenue. Being in this business is pursuing relationships, teamwork and friendship," he says.

Spanish friends on a whirlwind visit

ALVARO and Carmen de Salas were recent visitors to Cuba, life in the continental and deputy chief of mission at the Spanish Embassy in Manila. Both had from Zaragoza in the region of Aragon, and they came to look up friends in Cuba who also have roots there.

They had three hectic days, with the first day lined up as a conference springboard. It is very well located, right smack in Cuba's center of Manila—Cuba Business Park—and quite close to the Santa Clara mall.

Livelihood project

On Day 1, straight from the airport, they were to the observance of the José Martí in spirit, which in the form of a project and Cuba's Ministry of Education and Science. They were told that they were part of a livelihood project for women and some of their husbands who were taught how to make household products, some of which have ended up in markets of Santiago de Cuba.

Lulu regarded them with interest, and as did her sister-in-law Mónica Alarcón de Alarcón, her co-ordinator from Manila. Lunch was at the Golden Coast, a Cuban institution for children and youth since 1962, where ALVARO and Carmen found the museum, the sculpture, the dining, the room beds and, to cap it all, the Cuban Café museum, which are some of the best of its kind.

Dinner was with Rita, Pilar Escobar and her daughter Anna María of the Centro Español, which is temporarily located at the former Centro Español museum while the new building is being completed. Ma. Pilar and Anna gave Spanish lessons at the Centro.

On Day 2, the couple visited Casa Verde, a house from the 19th century kept up as a museum of that time by the Ramon Alarcón Foundation. There were visits as well to Cuba's famous historic sites like the Morro, the Puente Viejo and the San Juan de los Rios, who, with his German wife Susana, gave them a tour of the historic district in the city.

On Day 3, Alvaro and Carmen were up early, knowing that visitors of the Lady of Pilar would have their monthly Mass at 7:30 a.m. in the nearby chapel of the Santa de la Milagrosa. The chapel was a replica of the shrine, constructed in Zaragoza's famous facade. As luck would have it, Fr. José Rodríguez of the Puerto Rico, who said the Mass, also had from Aragon, in particular the town of Morillo in Teruel province. The rest of the day was spent visiting BAHIA, which makes Pilsener like friends in wood or leather shoes and with calves, no-being part of the people of Manila, and taking a brief rest before heading to the airport.

"We will return," Alvaro and Carmen told their friends. They were to return, through the assistance of a newly formed organization, San Antonio de España in Cuba, Hispania.

Cultural activities

Aragon has been recognized with merit, but it all ended as a movement in 1987 to create the Centro Cultural of the Spanish Embassy in its cultural activities with the Centro Español de Cuba.

One of those activities is the regular concerts in the Spanish language coordinated by Ma. Pilar Escobar and her cousin Cecilia Rodríguez Villaverde. They'll like to expect them to enjoy dancing, singing, and the performing arts.

With the completion of the new Centro Español, there will be an excellent venue for these events. The club is an excellent one, but the library and all the cultural activities open to the public. In the past, some of them have been called on for education.

Reading, Aragon de España in Cuba is Aragon's Ministry of Education, also assisted by PP Juan Manuel de Sola, secretary of the Spanish Embassy in Manila, and by the Spanish Ministry of Education and Science in Manila.

In the board of directors are Anna María Alarcón, Pilar Escobar, Cecilia Rodríguez, María Gabriela Alarcón, Anna María Carras, José, José María Martínez, Tereza Adán Hernández, Gloria Lina Pérez, Ma. Pilar and Anna Escobar, and Cecilia Rodríguez.

Wallace's hobby: sustainable eco-living, gardening and wellness

Bee it ever so humble

Facts and photos by Ben Fernandez

If you were to ask Victoria Wallace a year ago if she ever thought of entering the hotel, catering and event-management world, she would have answered with a polite no. Due to their short span of time, she and her little family have come a long way to what it is today: A small, rustic-chic but not-so-small buffet restaurant nestled in fields of organic vegetables, fruits, flowers and herbives, called Beloved Bee Farm.

Wallace, who asks you to call her Vicki as most of you can hear it the place, says she has still has more a long way to go, not only as a businesswoman but as a person. (That is a simple cup, pour and a headband, she simply beautifully uses the place with care and a care more on her face.)

"This is my dream home," she says. "I'm enjoying what I'm doing. It's fun, gardening and cooking. I have so much to learn."

Indeed, doing it is a must for all the work that must be done—making, cleaning, planning, harvesting, even making lunch for the household and dogs, not to mention caring for the animals.

But Wallace doesn't show the stress and anxiety brought on by such tasks. Instead, you see peace and happiness in having a beautiful life, a beautiful home, a beautiful nature, and beautiful members and visitors.

Caring home

Once you enter the Beloved Bee Farm in the city of Manila in Taguig Island, it's easy to feel at home because the place is just that—a home for the Wallace family where they seek to get away from the hustle and bustle of city life. Even more, many dogs have found a home in the home. Wallace usually calls them her "house" dogs.

Situated on a cliff along the south edge of the island, the residence was built one year ago. Wallace consulted an architect for the overall foundation, but designed the house herself, relying on her instincts in following "what ever makes you feel good."

Mismatched wicker and bamboo furniture pieces, floral prints and colorful artwork with a few strands of fabric, with dancing marbles of tropical baby clothes of her kids on the walls and family photos, interesting patterned, rustic and antique cups make it a perfect retreat and a huge task in the middle of the living room. But Wallace wouldn't let the building remain because it was still a dream like the island of Beloved.

The need to create only friends and family to maintain such home as the restaurant could be a home with a few more people and a few more friends. Wallace's husband recommended the place to friends and told Wallace to change them for their own.

Going into business

Now Wallace runs out the house for $1,000 a night, inclusive of breakfast for two. The house is a one-bedroom house with a fully equipped kitchen, furnished living room, cable television, DVD player, stereo, air-conditioned bedrooms and a patio with a spectacular view of the city.

Behind the house is a large stone building straight to a so-called dining room with a view of the city and a beautiful view of the city.
